

‘Youths are suitable for leadership positions’

In today's world, new technologies are invented each day. Tomorrow seems to be more advanced and better than today, which means that the young generation is becoming more brainiac day by day. The folks of the current generation are superior to those of the older generation in terms of creativity and intelligence. This is why I completely concur that young people are qualified for leadership roles.

Youths have many qualities in them, especially generating fresh ideas. Anything can be made better with few ideas. My old grandfather used to spend many hours while cleaning the garden. But, my brother brought him a gardening machine which saved both time and effort. This was a smart thought which came to a young mind. Moreover, I have observed that my younger brothers and sisters are much smarter than I was at their age. They have access to a better learning environment with new technologies and updated softwares. By contributing beneficial opinions, these young generations can play the best role in any task they perform.

Talking about the opportunities, young people get more opportunities to learn from the experiences of aged ones. They can learn from the mistakes of the older ones and sharpen their work. They can even turn the weakness of the previous leaders into their strength by investing some time and labor. For instance, organizers while conducting a program might make some mistakes, but the chance of repetition of the same mistakes in the upcoming year is rare. Hence, no mistakes from the past will be repeated again by other young people as well.

Despite youths being the perfect choice for the leadership positions, there are many people who don't trust them. Many citizens feel that the older population are more responsible, experienced and the suitable candidate for the leadership positions. In the context of Nepal too, there is a misbelief of accepting leaders of older generations only. We from a very young age have seen older people in the top most positions of government which has led our country to this darkest scenario of poverty, unemployment and unwise utilization of available resources.

In conclusion, youths have all necessary qualities for the leadership position. This fact needs to be spread everywhere and the people supporting old citizens for leadership positions should be given more awareness. People who work together to support young people in leadership roles have the power to bring beneficial changes in the nation. The recent win of Balen Shah justifies my point clearly. Therefore, I believe youths are the most suitable ones for leadership positions.
